Sauces of Various Kinds.—Lexicographers tell us there are various kinds of sauce, some of which are exceedingly appelzing, while others are difficult of dignation. The eld colonists, and even our modern Yankees and Virginians, speak in their quaint, rustical way of "garden saas," under which term they include all culmary vegetables. But there is another kind of sauce which deriving its name from a palatable condiment, is yet, in itself, durectly the reverse of palatable; we mean the sauce of a pert young gentleman or forward miss, in whose ducation manners have been neglected. The third kind of sauce is the best of all, inasmuch as it gives to the languid appetite and flavor to viands which need its aid. These sauces are variously prepared, and are known under different names; but the one whole is the most eclebrated for its toulc and invigorating properties, is the Worcestarblive sauce, manufactured by Lea & Perrin, and sold by their sauce, manufactured by Lea & Perrin, and sold by their sauce, manufactured by Lea & Perrin, and sold by their sauce, manufactured by Lea & Perrin, and sold by their sauce, manufactured by Lea & Perrin, and sold by their sauce, manufactured by Lea & Perrin, and sold by their sauce, manufactured by Lea & Perrin, and sold by their

The recent charge made against me, as Presidentwess of the rockety, render at proper for me to make to the gubile a brief statement, which I shall probably have no other opportunity of making. The association was organized on the 16th of May, 1835. From that time for about three months, I travelled over the city, distributing circulars and constitutions, so as to cause our society to be known. Bur ng that time I received in donations $11 10, and no more. In the middle of August my health gave out and from that time I have not myself solicited donations, but that work has been performed by other members of the society, assisted by such of the receipients as we conscienced worthy of treas. The amount they have colested they have accounted or and paid over to me. In this manner the following amounts have been paid over to me:—
Prior to 17th August.
